

Briefing 15 - Research for Health at the Directing Council of the Pan American Health Organization

In recent years, national governments, PAHO/WHO, and the international research community have called for the strengthening of national research systems and improved use of research results. Building local capability and innovation in low and middle income countries are priority concerns. PAHO's resolution to develop a Policy on Research for Health was designed to assist in developing strategies and plans that address the needs of the Americas region, and align with global and regional policies.
