

Frameworks for system development

Research for health system development depends on a series of steps and approaches that COHRED encourages each country to put in place. After identifying what exists, what needs to be put into place and what actions derive from the analysis, low- and middle-income countries can then develop the relevant policies that enable the putting into place of planning and implementation of research for health.